Conservation Teams

Since the late 1980s the Scottish Wildlife Trust's Conservation Teams have been carrying out countryside conservation work and operating successful training programmes throughout Scotland, benefiting hundreds of local conservation trainees. Our teams have built up considerable knowledge and experience in planning and undertaking conservation and wider countryside projects.

We have done work for a wide range of clients including private landowners, local authorities, golf courses, landowning conservation organisations, farmers, and trusts, including the Border Forest Trust and the Woodland Trust. Our work includes creating wildlife gardens and ponds for schools, woodland maintenance and tree felling for community groups and coastal and core path maintenance and development for a number of local authorities.

As well as conservation work our network of instructors can provide a wide range of LANTRA certificated training, including brushcutter and chainsaw use. We also provide NPTC chainsaw training and have our own NPTC chainsaw assessor.

We offer a very competitive daily rate or are happy to quote for an entire job or project.

Variety

We have the skills and experience to work on a range of projects including fence construction, countryside structures, footpaths, scrub control, woodland management, control of invasive weed species (including herbicide application), wetland management, habitat creation, habitat restoration, and a full arboricultural service, including tree inspections and tree surgery.

A Complete Service

We can manage the entire project from site survey and quotation, through to completion. This includes; project design, selection and ordering of all materials, hire of any machinery and project management. We can also provide maintenance in subsequent years, as required.

Experience

We provide experienced and skilled supervision for teams of workers, who are trained to use all tools, machinery and equipment, including brushcutters and chainsaws.

Environmental Sensitivity

Our dedicated teams are ideal for sites where heavy machinery cannot be used, such as sensitive sites or those where the terrain is difficult. We offer great value for money for tasks requiring large numbers of people, especially where chainsaw and brushcutters can be used.
